Applications for major financial support from traditional funding sources.

help interdisciplinary investigators collaborate and collect data to support which will help us better understand the multifaceted impact of digital media on

Children and Screens is excited to support these important research projects, critical questions on the effects of media exposure on toddlers, children,

Children and Screens has awarded two, $100,000 scientific grants to

Funding Devoted to Children and Media Research into its next phase of growth and development.

interdisciplinary experts with diverse perspectives. It is also the largest was the result of a groundbreaking collaboration among more than 130 leading education, law, public health, and public policy among others. The supplement

Implications for Psychosocial and Behavioral Health about the relationship between children and media, and offered a roadmap for questions will take something more, such as realtime monitoring, advanced media diaries, and other indirect methods have helped frame important questions.

paradigm shift in the research community. Studies based on parental surveys,

In addition, an Exposition on Tools and Methodologies will run concurrently with philanthropists, and other thought leaders from many fields. Lectures, panels,

In the supplement, 17 were among the top 25%, and 5 were in the top 5%, of all comprises 22 high-quality white papers authored by 130 academics, researchers, related goal was to demonstrate the essential role of childhood media exposure while minimizing the Congress.  This new program reflects the Institute's desire to encourage a new center,

Institute's ongoing effort

Excitement is building about Children and Screens' Second National Conference

And in Case You Missed It...

Registration Now Open

HI) and Michael Bennet (D-CO) have asked the NIH to provide a briefing on the

along with Representative John K. Delaney (D-MD) are expected to introduce

Children and Screens has produced a special and a Communications Director to lead the organization

Children and Screens is seeking an Executive Director

IN THIS ISSUE...